THE IRISH CRIMES ACT. LONDON, 2nd May. In the House of Commons to-night Healy moved that the first clause of the Crimos bill be so amended as to indicate clearly to what portion of Ireland it would be applicable. He suggested that the words "problaimed districts" be omitted, and that Kerry, Lindonderry, and Belfast be inserted in their stead Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, declined to accode to this proposal, and said the Government intended to apply the clause to all parts of Ireland where the prevalence of crime justified such action. Mr. Healy then asked if blood-stained Belfast, where troops had been shot and policemen murdered, was to go free, while the miserable districts in the southwest were to be punished. Mr. Balfour replied that the Government would exercise perfect impartiality in suppressing disorder everywhere. Mr. Labouchere said the scope and sim of the bill was to orush out the Nationalists, leaving the

The navy regulations require that in all cases of accident a board of inquiry shall be convened at the scene of the accident and an investigation made. Admiral Chandler explains his failure to do this by saying that there were not enough ranking officers at the station to constitute such a board, but the true reason seems to be on account of the bad blood between them, as junior officers can sit on a board of innuivy in the absence of ranking officers. These boards have no power to pass sentence, and can go no further than to ascertain all the facts.
